

10 August 2008 – TAINAN, TAIWAN – ON 9 AUGUST, campers were taken out by their respective host families. Activities ranged from eating in traditional restaurants to visiting local art galleries. The next day, students returned to Tainan Municipal Shengli Elementary School, where classes resumed.

High school campers, volunteers from Tainan First Senior High School, and elementary school students from Tainan Municipal Shengli Elementary School

11 August 2008 – TAINAN, TAIWAN – THE KHGS INTERNATIONAL Summer Camp students resumed their tour of Tainan's tourist attractions on Monday with a visit to a salt processing facility. The process of harvesting salt from the ocean was explained and campers were permitted to explore and investigate the salt fields. Later, the students were treated to a lunch at a seafood specialty restaurant. The excursion commenced with a guided tour of a nearby museum exhibiting traditional Taiwanese dwellings, architecture, and furniture.

Students look at the mounds of salt waiting to be dried

Traditional Taiwanese architecture on display

Old-fashioned mailbox on display

Back at KHGS, the students started their four session of Qigong practice, deftly executing swift movements with dexterity. Now that the campers had mastered the traditional form, they were taught the faster, more advanced form. "It's similar, but very different at the same time," commented one exhausted student.