Highlight: Hot Springs

Red, green, white, yellow, brown, lime green; rose, tea, milk, egg, meat, and wine. Those were the unusual flavors and colors of the individual pools of hot spring water. Getting out of the shower room, the uncomfortable feeling of wearing swimming caps and looking bald wasn't as bad as some imagined. As long as everyone was wearing it, it didn't feel that strange, no. We were awed by the kiddie playground, which by the way, was huge and was scorching hot! Our eyes popped out of our sockets when we saw bars, the saunas, spa treatment pools, swimming pools, and swimming pools with some Taiwan board game floating about. There was one hour and thirty minutes. Chaos unleashed itself as we headed to the separated sex showers/ changing rooms—from getting changed with wet clothes to lost and used towels (courtesy of the Chung Family) and soaked hair. Everything was in a rush and panicked blur. Everything from the beginning of the hot spring visit to the end was so fun.

AWESOommEE~~ They have a milk pool! ... Smells like milk by the way >W<

What we did

First, we went to eat breakfast and then after we went to Chuang-Tang Spring Spa Hotel and relaxed in the hot springs. The hot springs was awesome!! Most of us went to the public one but Karen went with her mom to a private one. We then went back to the Tou Chen farm Inn that we stayed at and had lunch. After a short one hour break we made our own DIY t-shirts and bags with paint and leaves. It was pretty creative and some people had really good designs. Then we had a fishing break and went to start on some farm work. We went to the

Even though our corneas were severely damaged, Belinda thought it was okay because we got sweet potatoes (I did not say that!!!). We then came back to the farm Inn and ate a BBQ dinner. Another break then arrived swiftly and we then made paper lanterns and lit them and watched them float away gently, with our severely damaged corneas, or retardedly in Belinda and Mabel's lanterns. THE RADDING END! D:< (if you are wondering who wrote it, its Karen ... with some additions from Belinda ^-^) vegetable plantation where we built our own sweet potatoes stoves out of stones and more stones. But, the fire burned out our corneas.

"Yesss!! Our lantern is the only one going to Chinaa!! Oh wait wait, darn... it went to America like the others.

*TT^TT"

YEA!! Mabel and Karen's fire is a hot fire!

Everyone celebrates the accomplishments of making an old fashioned stove.
